SPAIN

SPAIN

Burning Bright

To visit one part of Spain—a feast for all the senses—is to sample only one bite at a banquet. Imperial grandeur, pastoral beauty, majestic landscapes, a glorious history, and food so healthfully delicious that it was named a UNESCO Intangible Cultural Heritage of Humanity ... these are all just garnishes to the experience that is Spain.

The cuisine is far from the only honor UNESCO has bestowed on this nation. With 53 Biosphere Reserves—gorgeous wetlands welcoming wild birds and more than 176 endangered species—it's home to the highest number of them in the world; 49 World Heritage Sites have also been recognized by this organization.

In today's culture, Spain's presence in the world of high fashion has drawn attention globally; Madrid and Barcelona remain model destinations for students and jet-setters alike.

SPAIN 7-DAY CURATED ITINERARY

Day 1 – Arrival in Madrid

Begin your exploration of Spain in its capital, the vibrant city of Madrid. Get to know its avenues, architecture, and attractions from a double-decker bus, hopping off to discover any sights that catch your fancy. For your first evening, embrace the local heritage with a flamenco show featuring another Spanish must: delectable, small-bite tapas.

Day 2 – Madrid

See some of yesterday's best highlights up close on a walking tour of the city. Skip the line and visit the Royal Palace, the largest in Western Europe. Stop for lunch in bustling Plaza Mayor, where a plethora of cafés and restaurants lay tucked among the historical buildings. After, make your way to the holiest building in Spain, the Catedral de Santa Maria la Real de la Almudena, and its accompanying museum.

Day 3 – Toledo & Madrid

Venture to nearby Toledo for a half-day tour of the historic city. Medieval Moorish, Jewish, and Christian influences blend beautifully to create a resplendent architectural style that's purely Toledoan. Later, head back to Madrid to peruse the stalls of Mercado San Miguel, one of the oldest and loveliest markets in the city, for tapas, hams, olives, Spanish wines, and other culinary treasures.

Day 4 – Barcelona

Start the day with a high-speed train ride to another capital: Barcelona, Catalonia's most iconic city. Begin your exploration along the narrow streets of the Gothic Quarter, known for its quaint shops and prized eateries. Discover the cultural scene next, as you visit the Picasso Museum, Museum of Chocolate, and the Banksy Museum. Between exhibits, stop for lunch at the Palau de la Música Catalana, a shining example of Art Nouveau.

Day 5 – Montserrat & Barcelona

Travel beyond Barcelona's borders to Montserrat, a picturesque mountain range home to the peaceful Santa Maria Monastery. Later, see Antoni Gaudí's unfinished masterpiece, La Sagrada Família, on a guided skip-the-line tour. End your day learning to make paella, one of Spain's signature dishes, with your own market-sourced ingredients. Sample your recipe for yourself during a family-style dinner complete with tapas and sangria.

Day 6 – Barcelona

Today, you'll visit one of Gaudí's most popular works, the colorful Park Güell, a 17-hectare modernist wonderland in the midst of the city. From there, enjoy a leisurely self-guided walking tour for a deep dive into Catalonia's trademark art style, checking Casa Vicens, Casa Mila, Casa Amatller, Casa Batlló, and Casa Lleó Morera off your list.

Day 7 – Departure from Barcelona

Take one last stroll around Barcelona, browsing the myriad shops of Las Ramblas, the city's most famous boulevard, for mementos.

BARCELONA

Cosmopolitan, chic, and more than a little Gaudí, the capital of Catalonia is a unique city that is unabashedly proud to be itself. Catalan Spanish flows smoothly from lips with a distinctive accent, as tapas, paellas, jamon iberico, regional fish, sausage, olives, and wine are raised up to them.

Eyes, on the other hand, can't help but be lifted to the skies, following the lines of Modernist master Antoni Gaudí's architectural designs, from Casa Mila to the still-under-construction La Sagrada Familia and UNESCO World Heritage works such as the fantastically bizarre Park Güell.

Art Nouveau and Modernism aren't the only movements to sweep through the streets of Barcelona. Roman, Romanesque, and Gothic designs bring an old-world feel to districts like tree-lined l'Eixample and to world-famous Las Ramblas. This wide boulevard guides visitors to the entrance of historic Barrio Gótico—the original city site founded by Romans, featuring medieval palaces, gourmet restaurants, and jazz venues—and leads to the Port Vell Harbor, a popular cruise port with waterfront eateries and easy access to the golden beach of Barceloneta.

MADRID

In the center of the Iberian Peninsula lies the heart of Spain: its capital, Madrid. A city of passion, its architecture, music, dance, and art stir the soul like a tempest. The celebrated Prado Museum, the largest art museum in Spain, is where travelers can find some of the very best of the latter.

The mucha marcha, or “lively spirit,” local Madrileños are known for, however, is perhaps never so apparent as at flamenco restaurant El Corral de la Morer’a, where the sultry dance continues to flourish ... unless one happens to visit the Alonso Martinez, Huertas, or Santa Ana districts at night, where discotecas and pubs keep dancers of all types on their feet.

Music is much a part of daily life as well, with free concerts in the summer in Retiro Park, which also features a boating lake, rose garden, and the neoclassical Velazquez Palace. Baroque and classical styles provide a different perspective at the Royal Palace, but for the ultimate contrast, the historic Plaza Mayor demonstrates architecture of all schools from 1620 onward.

ANDALUCIA

In the southern region of Spain, it's easy to imagine royal caravans making their seasonal progress from the Mediterranean seaside through groves of oranges and olives. It was from here, this land of 300 days of sunshine, that Christopher Columbus departed for the New World—and where visitors can find a taste of the old one.

Provincial towns, exotic Moorish influence, towering mountains, and fantastical beaches are all part of the journey when visitors escape to Andalusia. The capital of the region, Seville, lures visitors to the western boundaries with views of the River Guadalquivir. Two UNESCO World Heritage Sites, the Real Alcazar palace—one of the best examples of Mudejar architecture—and the Cathedral are another draw. In Granada, the exotic architecture reaches even greater heights with the Moorish masterpiece the Alhambra, which lights the hilltop of La Sabica in a golden glow before the Sierra Nevada. Just as impressive, the Great Mosque of Cordoba bridges Eastern and Western aesthetics as the jewel of that World Heritage City. Yet it's the Mediterranean flavors that reign, fitting hand in hand with Cordoba's love of gardening. Effusions of plant life bring vibrancy to squares such as La Plaza del Potro, only minutes from the Alcazar fortress and medieval Jewish Quarter.

COSTA DEL SOL

Unfolding along the shoreline of southern Spain, the Costa del Sol lives up to its sunny name. Malaga's and Marbella's Blue Flag beaches are as stunning as any skyscraping creations of man. In the city of Marbella, an exclusive haven for the European elite, nightlife glitters as much as the sea and delectable cuisine dazzles, but differently than Torremolinos does. There, a resort town experiences its second renaissance as a center for nightlife, dining, and shopping on Calle San Miguel, and a hot spot for those seeking sandy beaches like those of El Bajondillo and La Carihuela.

Scattered throughout the coast are pockets of charm and leisure to match the excitement of the better-known destinations. For example, the whitewashed Andalusian hillside village of Mijas Pueblo draws in museum-goers and souvenir shoppers, while seven courses—one of which is the largest in Spain—attracts golfers. In Estepona, another white-walled town, two Blue Flag beaches, a sports marina, a palm-lined promenade, and picturesque squares lure yet even more visitors to the province of Malaga, a destination leading as much with charm as its 325 days per year of sunshine.

VALENCIA

Visiting Valencia isn't exactly visiting Spain. It's a trip to the past and the future, through the 2,000-year-old warren-like cobbled alleys of its walkable Old Town to the modern City of Arts and Sciences, which features a planetarium, oceanarium, and interactive museum. A stay in an autonomous community where Catalan is spoken on the street and proudly called Valencian. An adventure in architecture that travels through Rococo, Gothic, Moorish, and Romanesque schools of thought with amazing landmarks like the Palace of the Marques de Dos Aguas and the UNESCO World Heritage Lonja de la Seda mercantile center.

As plentiful as its urban attractions are, it's also a study in the importance of embracing the nature that led to a city's development—the first draw for the people that built it. For example, the 12 miles of beaches that curve around the coastline, the palm tree- (and buzzy bar!) lined Paseo Marítimo promenade, the Albufera Park wetlands reserve, and a wealth of gardens, from the Royal to Botanical Gardens and the Turia Garden that follows its namesake river's former carved-out course. Over 95 miles of cycle lanes and 40 bicycle-priority streets make these a joy to discover—all the better to work up a thirst for agua de Valencia, a drink that mixes the region's famous oranges with cava, vodka, and gin, and the paella whose existence we can thank this city for.

THE BALEARIC ISLANDS

One glance at this collection of Mediterranean islands is all it takes to give further sway to the perception that Spain is surrounded by touristic beauty—and that these isles are some of its most captivating.

Catalan and Spanish both, like nearby Barcelona, Mallorca is just as much of a melting pot as that major city. Case in point: over 2,400 restaurants, stunning Gothic and Moorish architecture, countless artists and musicians in residence, gorgeous old towns, nightlife in Magaluf that gives Ibiza stiff competition ... quite a challenge when the latter is known as a summer outpost of the most major European nightclubs. However, quiet villages and beachfront retreats lie between Ibiza Town and Sant Antoni's lively scenes, allowing visitors to march to the beat of their own basslines.

CANARY ISLANDS

South of Spain, riches to rival the plunder of a galleon abounds. But it's not yellow gold today's treasure-hunter seeks. It's Canary.

This chain of islands off the coast of northwestern Africa, just west of Morocco, has been a major attraction for the well-heeled for years. In the largest one, Tenerife, the third tallest volcano on the planet towers over UNESCO World Heritage Site Teide National Park, and in the background of a fellow UNESCO site, the city of La Laguna. Here, on this land of "Eternal Spring," one of the world's largest Carnivals takes place every actual spring.

Equally attractive is Lanzarote, to the northeast. Its entirety is a UNESCO Biosphere Reserve; its volcanic landscapes haunt visitors with otherworldly serenity. On nearby Fuerteventura, the "Beach of the Canary Islands," sunseekers roam 93 miles of picturesque sands unhurried.

Teide National Park & Cable Car

The highlight? Being sky-high on Spain's highest peak, over 7,775 feet above sea level. But first, your air-conditioned bus drives through Canarian pine forests and traditional villages to an optional cable car (tickets must be purchased at time of tour booking; not permitted for people pregnant, with heart problems, or under 3). Cross an enormous caldera and see the Roques de García formations before returning.

Tenerife Island & Masca

Head to Villa de Candelaria to visit its basilica with the Virgin of Candelaria, the patron saint of the Canary Islands. Continue to La Laguna, a World Heritage Site by UNESCO. Stroll through the artistic Old Town of Villa de La Orotava, and then on to Garachico. Visit Teno Rural Park to see the Hamlet of Masca, one of Tenerife's most beautiful landscapes.

Santa Cruz, La Laguna & Taganana

In this reduced mobility-friendly tour, start from modern capital and maritime hub Santa Cruz de Tenerife and on to La Laguna, Tenerife's first conquest-founded city, to walk its streets. On an air-conditioned bus, ride to Anaga Rural Park, a Biosphere Natural Reserve with a Tertiary Era laurel forest, then ocean-and-cliff hamlet Taganana for free time and lunch. End with a detour to Las Teresitas beach.
